

Letter to Unaffected Applicants

Dear New gTLD Applicant,

As you are most likely aware, ICANN took the TLD application system offline on 12 April 2012 following reports that some users might have been able to see some file names and user names of other users.

A description of the glitch and its effects are described in announcements ICANN has made and posted on its web page <<http://newgtlds.icann.org/en/applicants/tas/interruption-updates>>. Even as late as yesterday, 7 May 2012, our packet-level research uncovered a new set of instances (in addition to the previously announced instances) where a set of system-generated file names might have been viewed by another applicant.

Based on our analysis, there is no indication that your file names or user name were seen by other users.

We continue to review the system logs and system traffic for additional information. If any new data shows that you were affected by the glitch, we will notify you immediately.

We sincerely apologize for the inconvenience caused by this glitch and the delayed closing of the application window.

Please let us know if you have any questions or if we can be of any assistance by contacting us via the Customer Service portal at <<http://newgtlds.icann.org>>.

Sincerely,
Akram Atallah
Chief Operating Officer
ICANN
